A Translation from French into English of Camille Mauclair's Le Soleil Des Morts / Sun of the Dead

Living within the Parisian artistic milieu during the period of the Belle-Epoque, Camille Mauclair (1872-1945), French novelist, poet, biographer, literary and arts critic, was an acute observer of the various protagonists who shaped the cultural, social and political essence of that era. Mauclair became closely attached to the symbolist group of poets, writers, painters and musicians who gathered around the poet, Stephane Mallarme, meeting at his apartment each Tuesday evening. Consequently, both the poetry and prose of the young Mauclair became imbued with a symbolist style. Readers will recognize, under disguise, such people as Stephane Mallarme, Pierre Louys, James McNeill Whistler, Auguste Rodin, Claude Debussy, Paul Verlaine, Catulle Mendes, Paul Adam, Henri de Toulouse-Lautrec, Georgette Leblanc, Loie Fuller and Camille Mauclair himself. However, over time, Camille Mauclair became aware of the isolationist "ivory tower" attitude of this elite group this novel is a reflection of his own increasing dissatisfaction with the hermetic intellectualism of this elite group. He was increasingly convinced that his own artistic works should express concepts that would improve and educate society. In 1897, Mauclair severed his links with the symbolists and the novel Le Soleil des morts (Sun of the Dead) was written at this critical turning point in his thinking.
