Eritrea, which formally became independent in May 1993, is Africa's youngest state. Its relations with Ethiopia, whose government is now dominated by the EPRDF, are very close and cooperative; but those with the Sudan have been strained ever since January 1994, when the EPLF government accused Khartoum of supporting Islamic fundamentalist incursions into Eritrea. This book examines, among other topics, the state of democracy in Eritrea under the EPLF regime, the nature of Eritrea's burgeoning ties with Israel, the basis of the alliance between the present regimes in Eritrea and Ethiopia, the politics behind the outrage of the Eritrean government against "Islamic fundamentalist" movements, and the ideals and problematics of political Islam. Through the focus of this book is on Eritrea, the political problems of Ethiopia and the Sudan are also explored. Ethiopia has been going through a process of democratisation which is increasingly beset with difficulties and controversies. In the Sudan, where an Islamist regime is in power, there is a bitter struggle over issues of democracy and human rights. The war in the Southern region is the country's most grave problem. These questions are considered in the context of the new world situation in which the US is the uni-super-power, at least in the military sense of the term. In this connection, the doctrine of the USSR attention has been concentrated on some "threats" in the developing world to justify policy of intervention, including military intervention. These "threats" are also briefly discussed in this book.
