Introductory. An opinion of Ron. Charles P. Daly, Chief Justice of the Court of Common Plea, (rendered in a case which will appear in the official reports of that Court), treats of maritime barratry, and is of special interest, not only to scholars, hut to those engaged in the practiced administration of commerce. The point discussed is one of no little commercial importance, and which has become somewhat confused by careless or superficial application and consideration. And to the discussion of it, in this case, there has been applied rare scholarship, and philological research, as well as a nice discrimina Hon of authorities with the valuable result, that an ancient and important rule of maritime law, is restored from undeserved doubt and obscurity. In this view, the necessary permission has been obtained, for publication of the opinion in pamphletform. (Typographical errors above are due to OCR software and don't occur in the book.)
